NORTH VIETNAM-LAO

Substantial numbers of North Vietnamese troops remain in Laos. Accumulating evidence provided by Laotian military officers in the field, by Pathet Lao defectors, and by civilian refugees from villages under Pathet Lao control indicates these North Vietnamese number over 2,000. They are located throughout those areas of Laos where the only authority is that of the Pathet Lao--and their Vietnamese advisors.

For example:

Elements of a North Vietnamese division remain in Sam Neua province. A battalion from this division is reported with its troops stationed in three separate villages: Muong Liet (VH 1163); Muong Nga (VH 1459); and Ban Hong Kuo (VH 1958). There also is a North Vietnamese artillery unit near Sam Neua town. This unit is equipped with four 120mm mortars and four 165mm howitzers. Other North Vietnamese are stationed with the Pathet Lao as military advisors. Among the locations where these advisors could be found in mid-December were: Ban Kan (UH 9659), Muong Poun (UH 8336), and Muong Han (UH 9761).

Near Tha Thon (UG 8300) in Xieng Khouang province, there is a Pathet Lao camp where 100 North Vietnamese troops are stationed. In this part of Xieng Khouang province, other North Vietnamese advisors are stationed with the Pathet Lao at Muong Yarn (UF 3795) and at Ban Hard List (UF 6492).

In central Laos, there is ample evidence that the North Vietnamese are protecting the corridor to South Vietnam.

North Vietnamese troops--in strength from platoon to company size--are located with Pathet Lao units near Lak Sao (VF 9510); Nape (WF 1021); Mahaxay (WE 1922); and Khan Kout (VF 7020). The most significant concentration, however, is in the vicinity of Tchepone (XD 3248).

Here there is one battalion stationed at the Tchepone airfield. There are other North Vietnamese nearby: a reinforced company (300-350 men) is with the Pathet Lao 18 miles northwest of Tchepone (at XD 2076). Another unit (at XD 1634) is near Route 9 seven miles east of Muong Phine (XD 0929).
